Changing Pattern of Trade Union in Bangladesh

A F M Mohsin*

ABSTRACT 1999

A trade union, as is generally understood and accepted all over the world, is a continuing permanent and democratic organization, voluntarily created by and for workers to protect them at this work, to improve the conditions of their work by collective bargaining procedure. The problems of worker differ from country to country and from industry to industry even from workplace to another workplace in the same town or district. The trade union is formed for the purpose to get the legitimate interests from the proper authority. Thus each, whether local union or national centre, is unique of its own pattern.

The territory now comprising of Bangladesh had once been part of British India and there after Pakistan and as such it inherited trade unionism and trade union laws. Industrialization is very slow in Bangladesh, yet from the historical point of view the origin and growth of trade unionism here is quite old and continuous.

The history of the development of trade unionism and trade union legislation in Bangladesh is not very happy and wealthy. For the present study of changing pattern of trade union in Bangladesh, we must have a thorough idea of the origin and growth of trade unions, trade union movements, legal and constitutional aspects of trade union, functions of trade union, present activities of trade union and evolution of trade union policy.

An attempt has been made in this study to provide a comprehensive idea about all the above mentioned issues. This work shall fill the gaps in information required to project a full picture regarding trade unionism in Bangladesh.

In this work the suggestion were invited from workers, union leaders, management and the Chairman of labour court of six divisions. These were studied and analysed along with their recommendation. It is hoped that if these suggestions are implemented, it would help to formulate a good labour policy.
